

COLLEGIATE CLUB, RAPIDLY GROWING, SEEKS NEW HOME

The Collegiate Club, which in the short space of four years has taken its place alongside the better organizations of Washington, is looking for a building of its own. After occupying quarters in the Young Men's Hebrew Association building at 1347 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, where the activities of the body have been housed since its inception, members of the club feel that their usefulness could be enhanced in new quarters, so a committee is already at work scouring Washington for the likeliest looking place it can find.

It is not planned to build a new club house, but rather improve the property selected by the committee. Composing the latter are Dr. David S. Zlock, Selig C. Brex, and Louis Canter.

The club, composed of eighty-five members culled from the ranks of the best universities of the land, engages for the most part, in such mental relaxations as discussions of present-day matters of importance, inviting from time to time some speaker of note who is an authority on the subject in hand.

The social life of the organization is not overlooked, the fellowship-promoting side of the club including dances and entertainments given at intervals throughout the year. One such dance occurred at the Elks' Hall last Thursday evening. The program for 1918 is now being shaped, and promises to call for many interesting things.

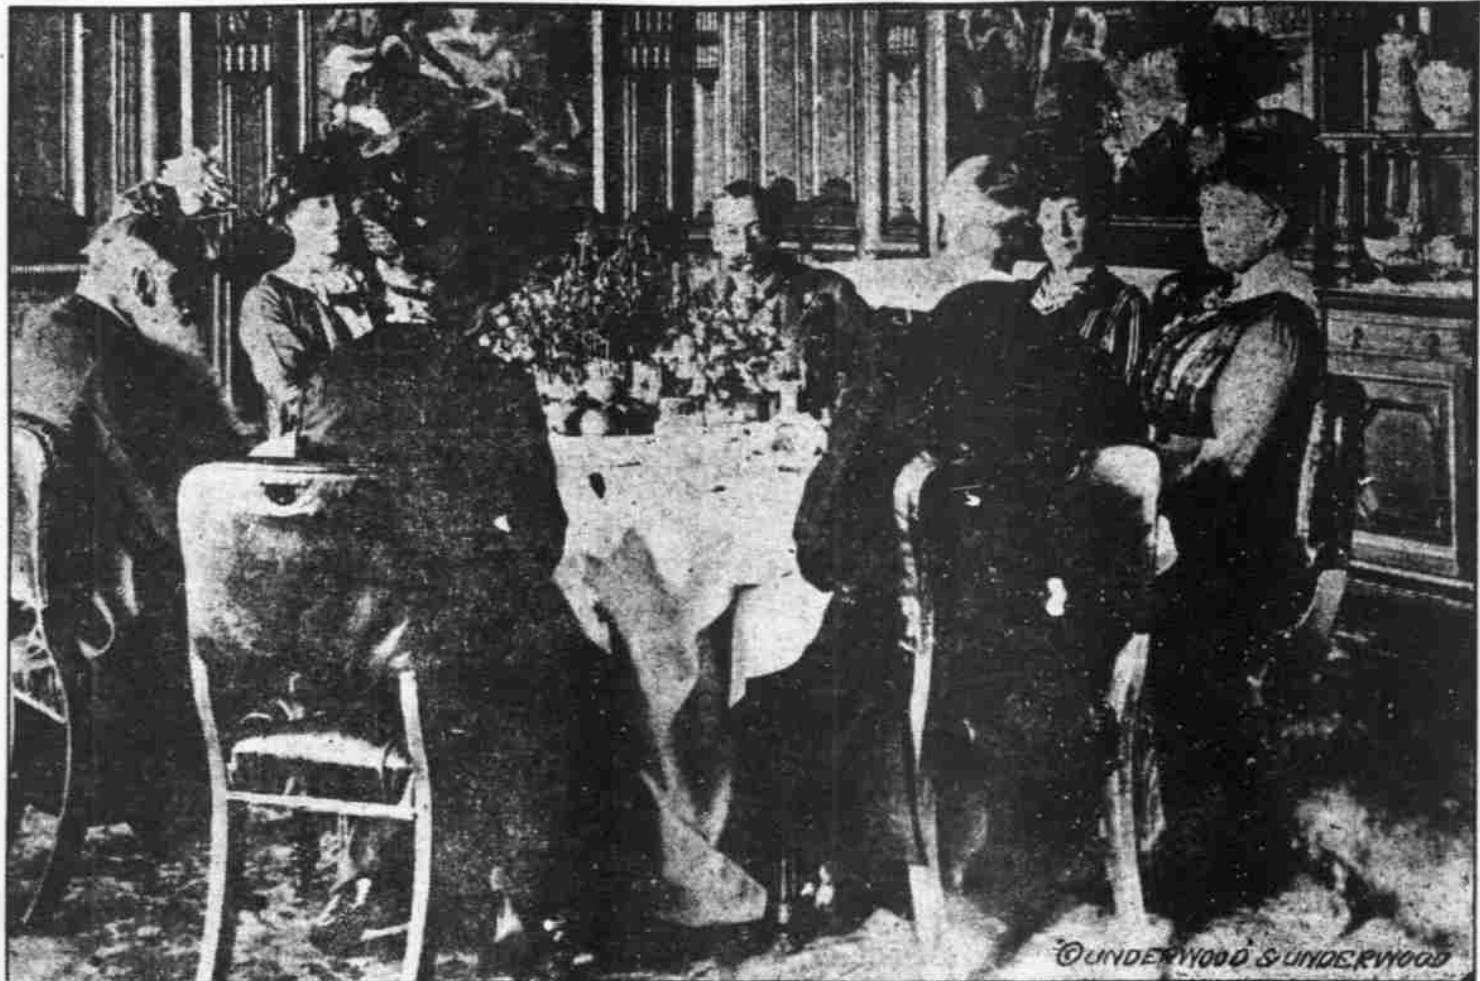

When the Collegiate Club acquires its new headquarters it is planned to operate the same on a co-operative basis. In it there will be dormitories for accommodating those members who wish to make it their home. Owing to the great influx of strangers in Washington, the club has not only taken in many new members, but has thrown open its doors to college men who can show the "color" of their alma mater.

King George A Disciple of Hoover

The British royal family is setting an inspiring example of war time economy and simplicity. At King George's table all flunkies have been dispensed with and the diners serve themselves. The service is extremely simple and to effect economy in the much needed foods dessert is dispensed with. This British official photograph shows the

DRINK FOR SICK MOTHER LANDS SON IN COURT

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 6.—Charged with violating the State prohibition law by bringing more than one quart of whiskey into Virginia, John Hall, forty-two years old, was in police court, the case going over until December 25. He was caught at Elba railway station with two quarts of whiskey and one quart of wine. He said that he had been living in Philadelphia for five years, and, while aware of the fact that Virginia had gone dry, he thought it was permissible to bring in as much whiskey as one pleased.

He said that he was bringing the two quarts to his mother, who has been ill abed at her home in Henrico county for several weeks.

PATRIOTIC PRISONERS OBSERVE MEATLESS DAY

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 6.—That sausage is meat is the conclusion of prisoners in the city jail. For that reason, they refused to eat the meats served them Tuesday.

"This is meatless day," declared a chorus of voices when sausage was set before the men. "Take it away." "It's that or nothing," responded the jailer.
But it wasn't. The prisoners sent out to a nearby restaurant for their meals, paying 25 cents each, and specifying that there should be no hint of meat about them.

Chief Young stated contracts for sausage had been made to feed the prisoners before meatless days were instituted and that he had to take it from the contractor or leave the prisoners without food.

SAVED THE DISHES.
"Well, this cook has the record." "How so?" "She broke something before she started in." "What on earth was that?" "Her promise to come."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CZECH SOCIALIST LEADER DENOUNCES AUSTRIAN WAR AIMS

In the course of a recent debate in the Vienna Reichsrat the Czech Socialist leader, Stransky, violently attacked Germany and sharply criticized Count Czernin's peace program. Referring to Germany, Stransky said it was the fatal desire for the predominance of the German nationality in Austria which had brought on war.

But for that the concessions offered by Serbia would have been considered sufficient. Europe would stand, a strong Germany, but not two strong German Empires side by side, governed from Berlin. Perhaps, after all, Great Britain, France, and America are not so simple as to fight merely for the freedom of the Poles, Bohemians, and southern Slavs, but fight rather for political reasons, for securing the guaranty of an Austria independent of Germany and not ruled from Berlin.

It has been asserted that the alliance with Germany is indissoluble, but nothing on earth is indissoluble.

Even if the union is so firm, circumstances may arise to render its continuance impossible, because they affect not only the policy but the actual existence of the country.

Referring to Count Czernin, he called the count's peace conditions nothing but phrases. They were no conditions at all, but only a designation of the situation which should prevail after peace. They were not even, as the count modestly claimed, his own ideas, but were "made in America;" that is, they were President Wilson's ideas put forth at a time when America was at peace.

Naturalized German Insults U. S. Uniform; —He Gets Six Months

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—"Those buttons smell bad. You should not be wearing this uniform," said Carl Kosewits, a naturalized German, as he laid his hand on the uniform of a petty officer of the marine corps. He was sent to the workhouse for six months.
